eEnergy lights up AIM

Take a look today at eLight, a leading 'energy efficiency as a service' business in the UK and Ireland which is set to join AIM this morning and become the eEnergy Group (LON:EAAS).

The company has announced the reverse takeover of Alexander Mining. Experienced technology entrepreneur and eEnergy CEO Harvey Sinclair tells Proactive how he and his management team are set to transform the energy efficiency market with an eye-catching business model that tempts customers with new money-saving lighting systems for a fixed monthly service fee. eEnergy promises schools and commercial/industrial clients lighting overhauls, allowing them to 'unlock cash flow from day one' of the change by switching to LED lighting.

eEnergy has so far raised £2million through investors with plans to grow the business and eventually plans to offer a full suite of energy-related services to its customers.
